Dollars of the World

OR considerably more than 2,000 years, silver has been used as money. But until 1486 its coinage was limited to pieces of small denominations. In that year the first silver coins of dollar size were struck for the Province of Tyrol by Sigismund, Arch-Duke of Austria, and were called talers. Similar coins were successively adopted by the various countries in Europe, and subsequently by nearly all of the nations on the other continents. The German states adhered to the original designation of the coin. It became a daler in Denmark, Norway and Sweden, a daalder in the Netherlands, a tallero in Italy, and a dollar in the United States. Similar coins were known as crowns in England, five franc pieces in France, rubles in Russia and Pieces-of-eight (reals) in Spain.

A SPECIMAN of that first dollar, now nearly four and a half centuries old, is included in the collection described in the following pages and exhibited in the offices of the First National Bank and Trust Company. Included also in this exhibition are 1600 different coins of dollar-size, struck by 429 countries, states, provinces, principalities, cities, religious bodies and organizations of various kinds during the past 442 years. Originally the coins were made by hand. The silver was hammered into sheets of requisite thickness, the impressions of the dies, obverse and reverse, made upon it, and each coin separately cut out with hand shears.

THE COLLECTION is thought to be reasonably representative of the entire silver coinage of this denomination from its inception up to the present time in all parts of the earth, and is believed to be the most comprehensive existing collection of "Dollars of the World."

IT IS, in addition, of unique historical importance since the relatively large dollar-size coins made them particularly adaptable to artistic die work and they are said to profile accurately the governing heads of many of the nations and authorities that issued them. This type of currency, therefore, in addition to its extended use as a monetary unit, serves also to record and portray a distinguished company of the celebrated men and women whose names are associated with the great events of the past five centuries.

WITH a charter running back 64 years, the First National Bank and Trust Company is one of the old institutions of America. WITH resources exceeding five million dollars, it has grown to a place among the best banks of the nation.

WITH more than 5,000 accounts on its books, its facilities supply the needs of a multitude of clients, ranging from the thrift accounts of individuals to the corporate accounts of companies.

BUT the largest accounts of the First National Bank and Trust Company once were smaller. Its oldest clients once were new. So the First National Bank and Trust Company, looking ahead to many tomorrows, values highly those customers whose accounts today may be new and small.

BIG enough to fulfill the requirements of great corporations and wealthy individuals, but progressive enough to welcome those of modest means; eager for new affiliations but faithful to old attachments—that is the First National Bank and Trust Company policy and practice.

OUR officers will count it a privilege to discuss your banking relations with you.

*C*HIS is the earliest dollar ever made—coined for the Province of Tyrol, by Sigismund, Arch-Duke of Austria in 1486.

It is now in the First National Bank and Trust Company.

If it had been placed on deposit the year it was made and its interest compounded monthly at 3%—the rate the First National Bank and Trust Company pays on thrift accounts—it would now amount to more than a half million dollars.

You cannot use compounded interest for 442 years but it can work for you through all your life. A dollar starts a First National Bank and Trust Company Thrift Account.
